<sup>1</sup>In some cases, the release of the data lags behind the time period for the data. This is due to the time required for data collection and verification, and quality assurance. In programs where employers are involved in providing the data (like the industry employment and occupational employment and wages), we give an ample amount of time for them to respond in reporting their employment information. Data are also reviewed by the US Bureau of Labor Statistics which adds time needed for quality assurance. For the Quarterly Workforce Indicators, the US Census Bureau also reviews the data.

<sup>2</sup>In order to provide more recent industry employment data, a survey (the Current Employment Survey) estimates monthly employment by industry. Whereas the quarterly industry employment numbers are a census (an actual count) of employment, CES data is a survey that produces estimates.
